SCHOOL TRUSTEES PLAN BUILDING

The trustees of the Jefferson School District have completed plans for a new Manual Arts building for the Manual Training, Cooking and Sewing classes. The plans and specifications have been approved by the State Architect and this assures the school district a well lighted, well ventilated and safe building.

The rooms now used by the Manual Training and Domestic Science classes are located in the basement of the Woodrow Wilson School. They are inadequate for the present needs of the children and overcrowded. The new building will take care of classes from the Crocker, Woodrow Wilson and Jefferson schools and provide educational advantages that the old rooms could not.

OUR PEOPLE APPRECIATE BLUE BLOODS

By J. W. MARCHBANK

Well bred thoroughbreds in the sales ring attract plenty of favorable attention even if they have never been to the races. Disposal of a band of nine last Saturday at Tanforan indicated clearly folks are looking around for runners as never before. Untried colts and fillies brought remarkably good prices.

Top price at the vendue was realized for the aptly named four year old Dispeller, son of the English Brig o'Doon and the American Alleviation. If you alleviate, you dispel, hence the name. This fellow was a picture as the noon-day sun shone on his satiny chestnut coat and the purchaser was considered a most fortunate individual by onlookers to have won out in the bidding. Other promising "buys" were made by well known sportsmen.

It is worth noting that Brig o'Doon, of pleasing conformation himself, is a great-great-great-grandson of Ben d'Or, one of the most famous of progenitors. In his book "The Modern Racehorse," Colonel P. E. Ricketts on a page opposite a reproduction of a W. A. Rouch photograph of Bend'Or, says:

"Ben d'Or was a very handsome horse, of commanding appearance and great substance, and at the same time symmetrical and well proportioned; a magnificent specimen of the English thoroughbred."

The beauty line in Ben d'Or causing such a rhapsody has come down through the years, as exemplified in descendants in tail male on exhibition in the Tanforan Sales Paddock.

My message of other weeks will bear reiteration:

Cut down the commission on parimutuel pools from twelve to nine per cent. Do it at the next session of the Legislature. With the pastime of racing firmly established on a sporting basis we may have a Ben d'Or or two ourselves some day.

LOCAL AUXILIARY PLAN POPPY DRIVE

The Poppy Sales committees from Old Glory Post and Auxiliary, Veterans of Foreign Wars, met on Monday evening of last week at the home of Comrade Brulez to discuss plans for a bigger and better Poppy drive. All members are urged to take part in the sale of the Buddy Poppies this year. More than ever before the funds are needed for relief work.

Sister Elsie Lewis, of Templetor avenue, was hostess to the members of the Sewing Club at her home on Wednesday afternoon of last week. Those present were Sisters Bedford, Ireton, Gaitor, Erratt, Wade, and Beckett.

Wednesday evening of last week a group of members of the Auxiliary motored to Palo Alto to attend the official visit of the Department President, Mrs. Phoebe Neron, who was being entertained by Major Zane Auxiliary of San Jose, Corporal James L. Wilson Auxiliary of Redwood City, and Allan H. Nichols Auxiliary of Palo Alto.

A delicious dinner was enjoyed by the members at Bertrand's Tavern, after which the ladies went to the Native Sons of the Golden West hall to hold a joint meeting. The distinguished guests present included Department President Phoebe Neron, Department Senior Vice-President Hubbard, Department Chaplain Mary Donahue, Department Chief of Staff Schurtle.

County Inspector Ethel Dorn made her first official visit of the year to Jacob E. Smith Auxiliary, San Francisco.

The Bi-County Council of Auxiliaries will meet in the Redwood City Veterans' hall, Saturday night, April 14, at 8 o'clock. All members are welcome to attend.

PIONEER RESIDENT PASSES ON

Frank W. Hoadley, of Crocker avenue, near Winchester street, passed away last Sunday after a long illness. Mr. and Mrs. Hoadley recently moved back to Daly City from San Francisco, where they had resided for the past seven years, since Mr. Hoadley became bed-ridden. The funeral was conducted from the mortuary chapel of W. C. Lasswell & Co., under the auspices of the Crocker Chapter, F. & A. M. Interment was in Cypress Lawn cemetery. Mr. Hoadley is survived by his widow, Emma W. Hoadley, and his children, Parker C. and Clara Hoadley. Other surviving relatives are Mrs. H. C. Constock, Mrs. W. Neeley, and Mrs. Frank Davis, sisters, and Walter E. Hoadley, a brother.

NEW SPENCER MURDER PROBE

Demand that the bodies be exhumed in an attempt to solve the mysterious death of Mrs. Edith Spencer, elevator magnate's widow, found murdered in her Menlo Park home July 20, 1932, was made last Monday by Mrs. Alice Johnson, of Oakland, sister of the slain woman.

TANFORAN TO AID THE UNEMPLOYED

Sunday, Tanforan will have the first welfare day of the present meeting when a special and an attractive program will be offered at the San Bruno oval for the benefit of San Mateo county's unfortunates. The proceeds of this program will be turned over to county authorities to be administered by established agencies in relieving suffering in San Mateo county.

The feature event of Sunday will be named for the cause for which the special program is being offered. Every stable at the track as well as track employes will co-operate in making the day a success, and courtesy cards will not be honored on that day, the idea being to net as much for the welfare fund as possible.

Even since Tanforan re-opened at least one day of each meeting has been given over to welfare, and in this way thousands of dollars have been raised for those in need of assistance. This meeting, J. W. Marchbank, director general of the track, has set next Sunday as San Mateo county's benefit day, and is doing everything possible to make the event a real success. Post time, as on other days, will be at 2:15 P. M.

Tomorrow (Saturday) Tanforan will offer the Juvenile Handicap, a four and one-half furlong race for two-year-olds, with an attractive purse of $1,000 added. The best youngsters stabled at the track will participate.

Last Saturday Tanforan enjoyed the largest crowd that has flocked to the races in many days. The clubhouse, grandstand and paddock were fairly jammed with enthusiastic fans, which lends marked encouragement to those seeking the return of real thoroughbred racing to California on a successful scale.

It is expected the crowd tomorrow and Sunday will be among the largest ever assembled at a racing meet in California, especially Sunday, when the welfare meeting is offered.

DEATH SEPARATES PARTNERS

Lasswell & Co., last Saturday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock, under the auspices of Crocker Lodge F. & A. M. Interment was in Olivet Memorial Park.

Prevents Woman From Ending Life

Mrs. Mildred McNaughton, 33, was removed from a street car by San Francisco police when a friend telephoned the authorities that the woman was on her way to the ocean, allegedly to commit suicide.

BUSY DAYS AHEAD FOR GOLD MINERS

By J. W. MARCHBANK
Pioneer in Frontier Mining Work.

Spurred on by the high price of gold, miners are engaged in rapid development of properties, whatever may be the method of getting the precious metal. Activities are maturing among the hydraulic men to renew their attacks on the upper reaches of the Sacramento river. For a long time operations were at a standstill on account of legislation prompted by farmers.

Hydraulic mining has been legalized once more and "goings on" are expected on such tributaries of the Sacramento river as the Yuba, Bear, and other streams. Under the provisions of the Caminetti debris law, local improvement district for the erection of debris dams have been approved by the War Department.

United States Army engineers have asked for a $95,000 allotment for conducting a survey and it is reported President Roosevelt may allocate portions of the $950,000,000 Civil Works fund for purposes of investigation.

Earle W. Knight, managing editor of The Alaska Weekly, is as strong in the belief that President Roosevelt is on the right path as this writer. He said recently:

"We are among those fatuous many who believe that, however plans may miscarry or difficulties beset his path, that our President desires, WITH A DESIRE AKIN TO PASSION, to achieve the changes which are essential to the good of the greatest number without the denial of just treatment to any individual or class."

Mr. Knight's remarks were prompted by the foreword of President Roosevelt's book "On Our Way," published in the last few days. The chief executive of the nation, in his customary lucid style, denies we are on the way to either Fascism or Communism, as is so often charged, saying:

"Some people have called our new policy 'fascism.' It is not fascism, because its inspiration springs from the mass of the people themselves rather than from a class or a group or a marching army. Moreover, it is being achieved without a change in fundamental republican method. We have kept faith with, and in, our traditional political institutions.

"Some people have called it 'communism.' It is not that either. It is not a driving regimentation founded upon the plans of a perpetuating directorate which subordinates the making of laws and the processes of the courts to the orders of the executive. Neither does it manifest itself in the total elimination of any class or in the abolition of private property.

"If it is a revolution, it is a peaceful one, achieved without violence, without the overthrow of the purposes of established law and without the denial of just treatment to any individual or class."

A sidelight on the beginnings of gold mining in British Columbia is given in the diary of Governor Douglas written in 1856, as narrated in Judge Howay's History of the northern province. The diary said:

"Gold was first found on Thompson River by an Indian a quarter of a mile below Nicomen. He is since dead. The Indian was taking a drink out of the river; having no vessel, he was quaffing from the stream when he perceived a shining pebble, which he picked up, and it proved to be gold. The whole tribe forthwith began to collect the glittering metal."

An active campaign of development is being conducted on the holdings of the Hercules Consolidated Mining, Smelting and Power Corporation, which comprises the largest group of mineral claims on the Pacific Coast. The road to the main workings is almost completed and permits all-year-round hauling of ore.

ACTION SOUGHT ON GARBAGE PROBLEM

The directors of the Bayshore Sanitary district appealed last Monday to the San Mateo county supervisors, meeting in Redwood City, for the county's help in stopping the dumping of San Francisco garbage on the Southern Pacific tidelands at Bayshore.

N. C. Wilson, chairman of the district board, appeared before the board of supervisors in support of a communication from the district, which asked the supervisors to cooperate in closing the Bayshore garbage dump. Wilson announced that the permit granted the San Francisco Scavengers' Protective Association to dump garbage on the tidelands has been revoked, but that the dumping is going on despite the revocation of the permit.

Residents of areas adjacent to Lomita Park asked that they be included in the Lomita fire district. They pointed out they had to depend on the Lomita firemen for fire protection, and they were willing to share the cost of the district.

The skit was followed with a tap dance by Rita Sadler and Elayne Wadiker, with Marie Denevi accompanying them on the piano. MINING NOTES

The Seattle Chamber of Commerce met on March 29 to consider several matters of importance to Alaska. A number of Alaska delegates attended. The committee voted to oppose S. B. 1665, which has already been passed by the Senate and now awaits action by the House of Representatives which authorized the establishment of a central experiment station of the United States Bureau of Mines at Salt Lake City. Section 2 of this bill provides for the transfer of personnel and equipment of the bureau of mines and also funds already appropriated or to be appropriated, for the use of the proposed central station at Salt Lake City. In protesting the bill, the Alaska committee pointed out that if Section 2 was put into effect it would undoubtedly result in the abandonment of the United States Experiment Station on the University of Washington campus at Seattle, and the transfer of the equipment to the Salt Lake station. The experiment station in Seattle has proved of great assistance to the mineral industry in Alaska and the Pacific Northwest states, and its closing would be a distinct loss to the development of the mineral resources of these sections.

In Utah mining and prospecting is being resumed with great optimism, the belief being expressed that 1934 will be a great year for the followers of the mining game in the Mormon state.

From Nevada comes word that mining operations this year will undoubtedly eclipse all efforts during the past two or three years. Nevada has a number of good mines and it is expected a goodly number will be added this year.

The last load of dredge material for the Walker's Fork Gold Corporation left Dawson for Walker's Fork, Alaska, Sunday, March 25, says a Dawson writer. William A. Ewing, superintendent of the Walker's Fork Gold Corporation, went down with the "cats." The new Cletrac cats of the company made exceptionally good time in their trips to the company's camp.

The Hallidie Machinery Co. last week shipped a 15-ton milling plant to the quartz property of the Alaska Exploration & Mining Co. at Cantwell, on Valdez Creek. F. L. Wagner, general manager of the company, who was in Seattle supervising the purchase and shipment of the plant, and also of various other machinery, equipment and supplies, reports that the company now has twenty men working at the quartz development under the able direction of Superintendent Dave Steiner, and that the mill, which was shipped on the SS. Yukon, March 31, will be used as a pilot mill pending installation of a larger plant.

The Grand Igloo of the Pioneers of Alaska completed its business March 24 after a week's session at Anchorage, after naming Andrew Nerland, of Fairbanks, as president and selecting Juneau as the next meeting place of the annual convention. It was decided to hold the next annual convention during the session of the Territorial Legislature, but the exact date of assembling is to be fixed by the president and other Grand Igloo officers.

Messrs. A. C. Stewart, well-known Nome mining operator, and Fred J. Wettrick, also well known in southeastern Alaska, have been invited to become members of the board of trustees of the Gold Mining Association of America, and both have accepted the invitation. This organization is now entering actively on efforts to obtain aid for new gold production and thus provide additional employment, also to aid in determination of the conditions to be met in formulating the code for gold mining under the N. R. A. With all this in view, Senator Oddie of Nevada, president of the association, is taking up these matters with the Administration and members of Congress in Washington.

GIVENS TO SPEAK IN SAN MATEO THURSDAY

Next Thursday night the Seventeenth District Congress of Parents and Teachers will have a special program for teachers and fathers as a feature of their convention. Superintendent Willard Givens of the Oakland Publis Schools and president of the California Teachers' Association, will be the guest of honor and speaker. He is one of the outstanding educators in America today and has just returned from the superintendence convention in Cleveland. Many teachers in this district are planning to attend as well as a large number of parents. This meeting will be held in the Junior College Auditorium at San Mateo.

BURLINGAME MAN SUICIDE

Leaving a note in which he asked that his body be given to a hospital clinic, Russell Yerington, 43, former Burlingame clerk, shot himself to death in his room at a downtown hotel shortly before noon last Friday. The body was found when hotel attendants went to the room to notify him of a telephone call from a sister in Alameda.

COUNTY HEALTH NEWS

NOTE: This is a weekly report from the San Mateo Department of Public Health and Welfare, giving facts of importanec to health protection, and a list of contagious diseases reported to the County Health Officer in the previous week, as required by law.

WATER (continued from last week)

Anyone who thinks he has reason to suspect the safety of a well or spring should make an investigation of the surroundings. IF THERE IS NO PRIVY OR CESSPOOL WITHIN SEVENTY-FIVE FEET OF A WELL, POLLUTION IS PRACTICALLY IMPOSSIBLE AND NO LABORATORY TEST IS NEEDED TO ESTABLISH THE SAFETY OF THE WATER. If drainage from animals can reach the water, the matter is for aesthetic consideration only. Disease can not result. The same may be said for dead animals in waters. It is not an appetizing thought to have one's drinking water so polluted but disease is not caused thereby. A well on a farm even with a privy within ten feet can not be contaminated with typhoid until either a typhoid case or a carrier appears in the immediate vicinity. The first case of typhoid in the family, therefore, must have received the infection from other source.

IN APPRECIATION

The smoke has now cleared from the recent election, in which I took an active part, and while it is needless for me to say that the results were somewhat disconcerting, the will of the majority must be respected. I wish to take advantage of this expedient of congratulating the Mayor and his successful incumbent candidates on their victory, and trust that they will have and enjoy a successful administration. To all my sympathizers, workers, supporters, and friends, I sincerely thank you for your untiring efforts and loyalty during this last campaign, and trust that the evidencing of our opinion will not mar the happiness as a resident of this community. I sincerely hope that some time in the future I may be able to reciprocate the many favors and kindness shown me.

S. F. Moose Invite Public to Annual Installation Fete

A grand ball and entertainment, following the colorful installation ceremonial, will mark the induction of the newly elected officers of the Loyal Order of Moose, San Francisco Lodge, into their respective offices. The affair will be held in the Moose Auditorium, 1623 Market street, San Francisco, at 8:30 o'clock on Wednesday night, April 25.

Past Dictator Edward Willig, the installing officer, invites the general public to come and make merry as guests of the organization. The following newly elected officers will be seated: Secretary, Clarence Dunleavy; Dictator, Harry B. Cullen; Vice-Dictator, N. Leavell; Treasurer, John J. Sweeney; Prelate, James H. Smith; Trustees, Joseph Clayton, Dr. Charles A. DePaoli, and Charles Nabenicht.

Flowers and Song Birds Out Early This Season

Not only are flowers blooming earlier, but fruit trees budded out two or three weeks ahead of time this year, but the upland game birds are taking advantage of the early spring weather, and have started raising families. Feathered newcomers have been noted since the middle of March in various sections of the state, a month before the usual appearance of these species.

Near Oroville, a pheasant hen with twelve baby chicks was observed by game wardens, while C. C. Huber, of Newman, reports seeing a quail hen with five little quail on a ranch near Newman, March 15. Quail and pheasants are usually just starting to lay at that time of the year.

At the Yountville game farm, operated by the State Fish and Game Commission, quail, pheasants, wild turkeys, chukor partridges, wild ducks and geese have started laying, and more than 2,000 eggs were gathered before April 1. Incubators are already "set" with the first of the 1934 crop of these upland game birds.

Having filed our income tax returns, if any, we may now await their investigation.

Employment in State Increased During March

The April issue of the California Labor Market Bulletin, released last Monday by Joseph J. Creem, Labor Commissioner, reveals that employment increased 7.8 per cent, and payrolls 6.4 per cent in the manufacturing industries of the state in March, 1934, as compared with February, 1934. Average weekly earnings declined 1.8 per cent in March, 1934, as compared with the previous month.

The only industrial group in the state to show a decrease in both employment and payrolls in March, 1934, as compared with February, 1934, was the motion picture industry. In that group employment declined 14.6 per cent and payrolls 7.9 per cent.

Correct this sentence: "Really, it was only a trifling operation, hardly worth mentioning."

HERE COMES THE BRIDE

By PAUL VANCE

©, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate. WNU Service

THE little fruit steamer had just arrived from the states—a big event for Port El Sol, where everything is reckoned as "two boats ago" or "three boats from now."

The smelly sun-drenched wharf was a scene of mad activity. Dark-skinned shirtless stevedores sweated and swore as they carried enormous packages of merchandise from the ship to pile on empty flat cars or dump into waiting carts.

In the general office the superintendent of the division, Mike Carew, was busily scanning the pile of letters that had just reached his desk.

He was a lanky young fellow under thirty, with gray eyes which twinkled merrily when not focussed intently on some object under scrutiny.

The letter he was reading seemed to absorb all his thought. Suddenly he looked up, also rising from his chair.

"Hang me for an egg-eating iguana!"

In one swift stride he carried the letter to the auditor's desk, where he slapped it down in front of another young man.

"Read that, Andy—and weep," he commanded.

"What's he done now?" queried Andy Benton, as his quick eye scanned the sheets in a familiar bold hand.

"Got married," answered Mike, curtly, much as if saying, "He's dead."

Andy picked up the letter for a careful reading.

He was a big man about Mike's age, with a mop of fine red hair and sea-blue eyes.

A whimsical smile wreathed his face as he finished.

"So that's why he was in such a hurry to get away!"

"Yep," returned Mike. "He did it with malice aforethought. Let's see, when does he say he's coming back?"

Andy consulted the letter.

"In about three boats—Joe, the sheik. I knew he'd fall sometime."

"Well, he's pulled a fast one on us, anyway. I suppose he figures we've forgotten all the tricks he's played us before. Say!"—Mike brightened. "Let's write him a letter that'll shoot a little worry into him. It's our only chance to break even with him."

"Fine! The girl won't need to know anything about it, and maybe young Joe will do a bit of wholesome sweating."

As soon as office tasks permitted, Mike fell to work on the letter.

He remembered how this same gentleman Joe had quickly revealed himself as an incurable practical joker whose supreme pleasure it was to turn the tricks on his two close pals, so that eternal vigilance became the price of peace for them. And yet, Mike recalled, Joe hadn't been from Port Sol three days before he himself had lamented to his fellow-in-bereavement, "Andy, Joe's as necessary to us as fleas to a dog."

And Andy had answered, "Yes, we're miserable when he's here and wretched when he's away. He sort of makes us forget what a hole this is."

Thought and emotion in a fine blend wrought the letter which soon went forth addressed to Mr. Joseph Rogers, absent on leave in the United States. A few excerpts will suggest the character of the whole.

There'll be a red-hot reception committee waiting for you at the dock, all right. There's Dolores, the commandante's niece for one. Says you promised to marry her at the Baile de Independencia. Her lawyer-father claims that a promise made under the influence of champagne is binding. They will be there with all the necessary papers. Then little Margarita Ochoa says you asked her the same thing the same night. She will be there with that killer-brother, Ochoa Hernandez. He says he doesn't need any papers. I've been training that bunch of half-breed kids you always play Santa Claus to so that they'll shout 'Papacito! Papacito!' when you start down the gang plank.

My advice would be for you to leave the wife in the states and come down yourself a boat or two ahead, just to get things kind of cleaned up. There are no company houses vacant and the G. M. says you will have to stay in the Paris hotel. A lousy place to spend your honeymoon.

Mike signed the letter with a grand flourish, and they mailed it together in high glee.

Little Joe was slated to worry—and how!

Another steamer-day arrived. Once more the remote port buzzed with activity. Make sat at his desk scanning the fresh mail. Suddenly he seized one envelope then ripped it open eagerly, but his look of keen anticipation changed to one of consternation which, as he read on, deepened almost to terror.

"Well, am I a bob-tailed olingo!" he moaned.

"What happened?"

Andy came over.

Mike weakly held out the sheet of robin's egg blue stationery covered with feminine script.

"Read it—and prepare for the hereafter," he counseled darkly.

Andy read, and then laid the letter back on Mike's desk as gently as if it had been a stick of dynamite.

"Gad, what a woman! Looks like you'd put your foot in it this time, Mike."

"Say!" shouted Mike, enraged by the holier-than-thou accent in his tone. "Where do you get that you-stuff? Didn't you help write that letter?"

"You signed it," said Andy. "I wash my hands of the whole affair."

"Oh, yeah! And who said she was made outa star-dust—that her eyes had cabbaged the moonbeams?"

"I was only quoting from Joe's letter, as you are entirely aware."

"Well, Joe must have been drunk on tiger's blood. Say, Andy, can't you just picture the kind of forget-me-not of the angels she is? Tall and bony, wears specs, and has shark's eyes. One of those women that gobble at you like a turkey instead of swearing."

Mike gingerly picked up the letter and read it again with interpolations of his own.

"Sir:—

Your abominable letter addressed to my beloved husband, Joseph Rogers, by a happy coincidence fell into my hands." (Yeah, fell is the word, all right. I'll bet your octopagian tentacles search every pocket he has) "If your intentions were as nefarious as this letter would lead one to believe, then fate was indeed kind to me in placing it in my hands." (Fate, and who else?) "It is evident that you are trying to separate two tender hearts whom God hath joined together." (The Almighty would have to hogtie me, old gal—um-m-m—let's see how she winds up—) "Unless you persist in your attempt to cause trouble between us, I shall never show this letter to my dear husband, who has always spoken of you in the highest terms of affection and esteem.

I am, Sir,
MRS. JOS. ROGERS."

A tight feeling caught Mike in the throat. If only the letter had reached Joe first, as intended, he would have read between the lines. But now—what a chance for friendly festivity!

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Rogers arrived two boats later. If his job had not required it, Mike would never have gone down to meet that boat. But as it was, he steered clear of the promenade deck where the passengers were congregated. Only once did he catch a glimpse of Joe and a tall straight female.

As he dodged down a companionway Joe spied him with a bunch of officials up forward and pounced on him like a hawk on a chicken. Without a "by your leave" to the astonished officials, he dragged him aft.

"Here he is, Myra!" he shouted.

Mike chilled at the note of triumph in his voice, but decided to make the best of an awkward situation.

As yet he had seen only the bride's back, but Joe's last mighty shove forced him through the circle around her and placed him practically at her side. She turned to receive him.

Mike tried to speak, but could only gasp. He stood gaping at the slender, blue-eyed woman who was Joe's wife.

"Kiss the bride, you old pirate," ordered Joe as he drew them together. As Mike remained in a daze, he whispered, "Old dumb-bell, I wrote the letter. She knows nothing about it."

Just then Andy loped up for his tenth look at the bride.

"Say, You two pikers," Joe called. "Where's the reception committee?"

Mike had to grin. Andy grinned sheepishly back. Again Joe had made them feel miserable and wretched for two weeks—and they still liked him.

Coral Island Group a Menace to Navigation

A group of islands in the China sea, over which it is reported the Japanese may dispute French possession, are so tiny and unimportant that many map makers do not show them, according to a bulletin from the National Geographic society.

"The group of seven coral islands, reported to include Taitu and Twin islands, lies approximately 300 miles northwest of Palawan island of the Philippines, and can best be located by drawing a line due east from a point a few miles north of Saigon, French Indo-China, and a line due south from Hongkong, China, continues the bulletin. The lines will intersect close to the islands.

"Perhaps more attention is given to the islands by the navigation chart makers that world map guides, for these and other islands in the southern part of the China sea long have been a menace to navigation. Not far east of the group is a vast area of the sea which hydrographic maps show as 'dangerous,' for it has not been surveyed.

"According to the Japanese government, a colony of Japanese once inhabited some of the islands.

"Today the islands are deserted except for a few Chinese fishermen who are provided with food by junks which visit this region once or twice a year.

"Palawan, the nearest permanently settled area to the islands, belongs to the Philippine islands group. It is slightly larger than the state of Delaware. The 25,000 inhabitants of Palawan are almost wholly Mohammedan Moros, descended from early Arab adventurers."

Grunt Fish in South

Grunt is an excellent southern food fish, particularly abundant off Key West, and is light bluish with brown or brassy spots and other markings. As generally caught it is classed as a pan fish, but big specimens will reach four pounds in weight.

Comes New Enthusiasm for Lace

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

HOW about it, have you caught the Parisian inspiration for lace? Of course you have, or will have, before the season is far advanced. It just isn't possible to tread the highways and byways in fashionland and remain immune to the lure of lace.

In the couturier showings for spring and summer, 1934, comes before our enraptured eyes a continuous procession of frothy, frilly, filmy dance and dinner frocks created of tulle and lace by such artists as Lelong, Mainbocher, Dilkusha and a host of other designers of high degree. A very new, very lovely and very chic idea is to animate slim, figure-fitting soft lace gowns with myriads of crisp tulle ruffles at shoulders and hemlines. One such is fashioned of shell-pink lace with crisp, sheer ruffles posed at the arms with billowy fullness about the hemline achieved through a frou-frou of many rufflings. The all-black lace gown with crisp black tulle ruffles or fine pleatings is a particular favorite.

In contrast to the airy-fairy types of fluttery lace and tulle is the gown of classic lines fashioned of handsome soft mat lace, a lace, by the way, which is outstanding in the mode. In the illustration we are showing an exquisite evening dress of white mat lace made especially by Molyneaux for one of the major social events of Paris. It took the first prize at a ball.

It would be a mistake, however, to carry the thought that the new laces are limited to the languid, glamorous social life. As a matter of fact, the most exciting doings of lace are taking place in the realm of tailleurs and sports clothes. Especially attractive and eminently practical for daytime is the suit of beige lace with blouse of navy georgette or the jacket ensemble of green net with blouse of beige alencon lace.

Lace for bathing suits, too, which makes real news, and for hats, for handbags, for ravishing neckwear and for entire dresses, ensembles and blouses, for gloves, too, if you please, and we must not forget the "darling" lace-covered slippers that will dance to sweet strains of music under starlit skies.

Because a dress is fashioned of lace does not mean that it may not be smartly wearable and conservative. The afternoon dress of green wool lace on the seated figure in the picture is just such—one of the outstanding models of the house of Dilkusha. It is a princess model and is finished with a draped collar held by one of the new polished wood clips.

A delicate web of black chantilly lace for the bodice top enhances the feminine allure of the dinner and theater gown centered in the group. Exquisitely thin cobwebby laces of this sort have captured the heart of the fashionable world this season, either in black, in white or pale beige, and in every imaginable pastel tone. The contrast between this lace and the soft mat velvet of the dress illustrated serves to emphasize the high neckline which is held with a crystal bar. The close wrist sleeves display the delicately traced lace patterning to perfection.

SHADES OF VIOLET BLOSSOMING GAYLY

Purples and violet shades are blossoming gayly in fashion for spring, 1934. Last season some purple was seen in boucles and knitted frocks, and this year it is out in cottons and linens. For a long time it was felt that heliotrope, orchid and violet shades were impossible in wash fabrics, as they came out in dull, muddy shades and did not hold their colors. These objections have been overcome, and the new violet range in handkerchief linens, French linens, ginghams, organdies and shirtings are among the smartest of the season's offerings. Cotton frocks in these colors are sometimes combined with little jackets of purple wool or velveteen.

This new trend is as important for children as for grown-ups.

Spring Hats Are Planned to Show Plenty of Hair

Dutch bonnets, Breton sailors' hats and the jaunty turned up brims worn by the musketeers of D'Artagnan's day inspire the first spring hats now shown in modistes' salons.

Eight out of ten roll right back from the face, making clear skins and smart coiffures of prime importance.

The rest tilt forward over one eye in a line as rakish as fashion has shown. But all are as feminine in design and effect as a perfumed handkerchief.

"Show as much hair as possible," seems to be the decree. Many models are worn well back of the hair line, others tilted well to one side (generally the right) to show the other side of the head.

Spring Woolens

This year's wools are woven to fall in soft, heavy folds, cloaking the figure in graceful lines. Most of them are woven "tone on tone" with irregular stripes or bars of the same color making their design.

ORGANDIE CAPE

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Capes made of sheer organdies, nets and mousselines similar to the model pictured are writing a charming chapter into the history of summer wraps. The theme of these dainty little shoulded wraps is being made much of by designers. At Paris social gatherings you see them created of the most fascinating colorful sheers fancy can picture. The gown is of white transparent mousseline with large navy polka dots, for dots of every size from pin to coin and larger are the rage this season. There's nothing smarter than white with navy for evening wear.

Queen Anne's Lace

—24—

"We would be glad to come any evening," said Anne with her accustomed frankness. "You are the first person who has asked us to dinner."

"What a neglect of opportunity;" murmured Mrs. Lassiter, "but it won't last long. Next winter we will have to speak for you months ahead. Meanwhile, I will get in touch with you again very shortly, Mrs. Conrad."

Mrs. Lee seemed as pleased as Anne herself at the invitation, and she told Anne something about the Lassiters as they drove away. Mrs. Lassiter was a very wealthy widow, it seemed, and acted as hostess for her son, who was unmarried, and the greatest "catch" in the senatorial circle. "You made quite an impression on him at the opening of congress. He asked who you were immediately after he saw you in the gallery, and has told several people he thought you were the prettiest woman there."

The promised dinner invitation was delivered by hand before Neal and Anne had finished their own supper that night. It was surmounted by a gold crest, over which was written in ink "In honor of the French Ambassador and Madame Marceau." Underneath, partly engraved and partly written, appeared the words:

Mrs. Lassiter
requests the pleasure of Senator and Mrs. Conrad's company at dinner on Wednesday evening December the 14th at eight o'clock.
2141 Massachusetts Avenue.

"Less than a week off!" exclaimed Anne. "Oh, Neal, what shall I wear?"

Neal laughed. "What a question for a woman who has just got back from Paris! Your clothes are lovely, Anne, you know they are,—and you mustn't try to save them. When the ones you have now begin to get shabby you must have some more. I think that white velvet with the glittering trimming—rhinestone do you call it?—is about the best—and I guess you better wear the best."

"It is going to be hard, Neal, driving a car in evening clothes."

"I know—I do wish we could afford more help. Dora must stop doing the washing, that's certain. You must send it out, Anne, or get a woman to come in and help with it and to get supper the nights Dora goes out."

"We can't afford it," Anne objected. But her objection was rather weak. It was all too obvious that neither she nor Dora could continue to work as hard as they had been doing without breaking down, if so many outside demands were to be made upon them.

"We have got to afford it," Neal retorted resolutely. "Thank goodness this is a short season! I'll be back in Hinsboro the fifth of March, digging away for dear life! No vacation for me this summer! My poor old clients will have to cough up enough for us to live on decently here, since the government won't, and next winter we will be doing things right. In the meantime, we will have to find some kind of temporary solution."

The solution presented itself in an unexpected, not to say startling, manner. When Anne returned from her round of calls the following afternoon ("Will I ever," she was saying to herself, "do anything in the afternoon again but call, call, call!") she drew back in alarm before a muddled figure which was crouched on her front steps, in an attitude of the deepest dejection. At her startled exclamation, the figure unfolded itself and stood up—a gaunt, unkempt man, young but haggard, dressed in a shabby uniform.

"Good evenin', marm," he said awkwardly, taking off his frayed cap, "sorry if ah frightened you. Don't need a man, do you?"

"Good gracious," exclaimed Anne, "I don't know. What kind of a man? What do you mean?"

"Well, ah meant my kind of a man," the intruder explained hopefully. "Ah ben lookin' for work quite a spell. But ah can't seem to find none. 'Pears like the fellers that stayed to home while we-all was to war collared all the jobs. Ah come up here to try to fix ma claim at the Veterans' bureau and ah ain't got ma claim and ah ain't got no money to go home with neither. Ah'm plumb broke. And ah got so dead beat, walkin' the streets, lookin' for somethin' to do, that ah finally set down here on your stoop. Ah ain't askin' for much . . your hired girl wouldn't let me in. But she said ah could wait outside till you-all come home."

"Can you drive a car?" asked Anne without circumlocution. The haggard veteran grinned.

"Well, ah hain't had much experience with Rolls-Royces and them, lady, but a small car—"

"It is a small car," said Anne with surprising suddenness. "Are you willing to wash windows and tend a furnace and put on a white coat and open the door?"

"Ah'm willing to do anythin'," said the man with pathetic eagerness.

"Are you—are you white? It is so dark I can't see. I've had my maid a long time and I don't know how she would feel about a colored man in the house," said Anne with slight confusion.

"That's all right, marm, ah don't mind you askin'. Yes, ah'm white all right. 'Pore white trash' you'd call me ah reckon. Ah come from the mountings, Kentucky—ah seen your hired girl. She's powerful pert lookin'. Ah'd be pleased to help her any ways ah could. Ah can cook a meal, too, real good."

"What's your name?" demanded Anne.

"Delancy. Mah first name's Hod—Horace."

"Well, Horace Delancy, if I get you the clothes you need and feed you, will you come to me for—thirty dollars a month? Until you have proved you are worth more? There's a little bit of a dark room in the rear of the basement. I'm ashamed to ask anyone to sleep in it, but if you—"

"Oh, marm," exclaimed Horace Delancy, "oh, lady!"

He pitched suddenly forward. Anne caught him, supported him. Neal swung suddenly into sight around the corner of the street and ran towards the house.

"This is our new chauffeur," said Anne calmly, "an answer to prayer. He just fainted away because, I expect—it's some time since he had a square meal; but he is going to be another household treasure just like Dora."

Horace Delancy, warm, fed, bathed, shaved, and clad in neat whipcord, drove Anne and Neal to their dinner at the Lassiters the following Wednesday evening.

"Well, Ah Meant My Kind of a Man," the Intruder Explained Hopefully.

It was—of course—a crazy thing to take a man off the street like that into one's house. Both Anne and Neal admitted it. But somehow, neither of them hesitated to do the crazy thing just the same; and Dora's harsh and suspicious comments were nullified by her kind and charitable actions. And she was repaid in kind. Horace Delancy had scarcely recovered from his faint when he assumed control of the furnace. The following morning he drove the children to school, Neal to the senate office building, and Anne to the Central market; and before evening he had washed every window in the house. It was not until Sunday, however, that his supreme opportunity came. Dora went out then, and he served his astonished benefactors, not the cold "pick-up" supper which is usually associated with a religious observance of the Sabbath, but a meal in which fried chicken, corn fritters, beaten biscuit, fruit salad, and Lady Baltimore cake were a few of the more substantial offerings.

Her release from the pressure of domestic duties immediately gave Anne an increased freedom of both action and spirit. On the eventful evening of the dinner she sang as she put the studs in Neal's dress shirt and laid it on the bed beside the white velvet dress with the "glittery" trimming. When Neal came home she had already bathed and was sitting clad in her silk slip before her dressing table, her hair hanging like a cloud of gold about her.

"Lorelei!" he whispered, laughing, and his arms slid down around her slim, pliant body, and tightened there. He lifted her up, and sat down himself, holding her closely to him. "Darling Anne! I do love you so! I don't say so often, I know, or show it as much as I might, and sometimes I know I seem preoccupied — indifferent — neglectful even but—" He did not try to go on. Indeed there was no necessity that he should. Anne understood, and made her understanding sweetly clear. When at last he set her on her feet again, he began to fumble a little weakly, a little shamefacedly, in his pocket.

"It is a long time since I have given you a present—would this be pretty, do you think, with the 'glittery' dress?"

"This" when taken out of the satin box with a little spring that clicked, and unwound from layers of flat cotton and twisted tissue paper, proved to be a diamond pendant, hung on a slender platinum chain finished with a diamond clasp. Anne lifted it out breathlessly, starry eyed.

SEE AMERICA FIRST

Now that spring is here, and summer is just around the corner, the minds of millions are occupied with plans for vacationing.

Where many travelers used to first think of Europe, they are now looking elsewhere. Many of them are going to follow the old adage and really see America.

Seeing America is an especially excellent idea. It's a big country, and very few of its citizens have more than a cursory acquaintance with it.

Take, for instance, Alaska, which is attracting a steadily increasing number of people who want a real vacation at a moderate cost. Most of us think of it in terms of ice—not knowing that certain sections produce giant strawberries and flowers. We think of the Arctic circle as being as far away as the North Pole—yet a little way south of it, at Fairbanks, there is a first class school of mines and an agricultural college. We think of the seas bordering it as being perpetually torn with storms—and the fact is that sailing to Alaska is always calm—with dancing on deck in warm evenings.

Yes, it's a fine year to look over your own home—the United States. And you'll find a satisfaction in knowing that the money you spend will go to American workmen and industries—and help us toward recovery.

VANITY BREEDS SUCKERS

Some time ago a score or more of Washington's social aspirants were induced to pay $100 each in order to be included in a "blue book," which it was promised would contain the names of the capital's elite. For $200 additional the photograph of the subscriber was also to be inserted in the magic volume.

The promoter of this scheme for glorifying the socially ambitious was 65-year-old Joseph Rheinstrom, who lived in style at a leading hotel and called on his prospective customers in a luxurious limousine, after making appointments by telephone.

Police investigated his activities, found that he had no connection with any social register, and put him in jail, charged with fraud. His dupes are naturally much embarrassed and are trying to keep their part in the affair quiet, but with little success.

This is another illustration of the ease with which swindlers trap their victims through appeals to that vanity described by Browning as "an itch for the praise of fools."

"There is a destiny that shapes our ends," and around middle age it ends our shapes as well.

THE PLIGHT OF PUBLIC SCHOOL TEACHERS

According to data given to the sub-committee of the Banking and Currency Committee of the House of Representatives, approximately $107,000,000 is owed to school teachers for services performed in many of the states of the Union. This indebtedness is classified as follows: Approximately $57,000,000 for which no evidence of debt has been issued to the teachers, and about $50,000,000 which is represented by warrants or certificates that can not be handled in the usual manner by the teachers.

Many who have studied the problem are of the opinion that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation should be authorized by Congress to loan money on, or discount teachers' warrants, leaving the matter of the adequacy of security in the warrants to the Corporation. The security would depend largely upon the status of the various school districts and urban corporations against which resources the warrants were drawn.

The plight of many of the teachers is such that it is impossible for them to perform their function of teaching the cherished principles and traditions of American life to the children of our nation when they are either on the verge of starvation or in such an unsettled frame of mind that they are unable to devote themselves whole-heartedly to their work. It is realized that the general problem of paying teachers is conceived to be a local and state responsibility, and not normally a function of the Federal Government. But since, in numerous cases, the Federal Government has found it advisable to deviate from its normal functions and grant emergency relief, it is hoped that the sub-committee here referred to will give sumpathetic consideration to the plight of the school teachers of this country.

HIT DEPRESSION ON THE CHIN

One reason why revial of the construction industry is regarded as being vitally important to recovery by most authorities is that the bulk of the employment it would provide is where it is most needed—among skilled and unskilled laborers.

In 1930, 2,500,000 persons were employed in the building industry. About 1,000,000 more were employed in construction work in other industries, bringing the total to 3,500,000. Managerial, professional and office workers constituted less than 12 per cent of these. The ratio was seven or eight wage earners to one "white collar" employe.

Again, it is reliably estimated that for every worker actually employed on a building job, another worker is employed behind the line in industries supplying necessary supplies. The upshot is that, in normal times, more than 10 per cent of all the workers of the country are directly or indirectly dependent for their livelihood upon the building industry. The terriffic drop in construction work that came with depression was as a result very possibly the largest single factor in causing unemployment.

Today American industry is expanding as rapidly as it can. And the individual should follow that lead, by building and repairing his own property now, while prices are still down. A national movement among home-owners to renovate their property would be a blow directly on the chin of depression.

WHEN BATHS WERE FEW

If certain data we have run across lately are authentic the joke about the Saturday night bath is not so old as we had imagined. It is recorded that the first bath-tub put in commission in the United States was chrisened on Christmas day, 1842. Looking up the day of the week in a perpetual calendar, we find that this was Sunday, but it is possible that the first bath was really taken on Christmas eve, thus establishing the Saturday night tradition.

Upon its introduction the bath-tub was looked upon with much suspicion, as it is by small boys to this day. In Boston an ordinance was passed prohibiting baths except upon the advice of a physician. About 1844 the Philadelphia city council came within two votes of passing an ordinance prohibiting baths altogether between November 1 and March 15. Bath-tubs were heavily taxed in these early days, even as the modern automobile. Shortly after they were introduced into Virginia a state tax of $36 was imposed on each tub installed.

Still, Americans of those times were more given to bathing than the old Russians. We have read somewhere that Peter the Great bathed only once a year. But there were extenuating circumstances. Russia is a very cold country.

AN EDITOR NODS

Few newspapers have a more erudite and clever staff of editorial writers than has the good old Boston Transcript, and there are few whose editorials are more widely quoted. But it has one editorial writer whose erudition has not kept pace with his cleverness, or if it has, he quite evidently nodded sadly in a recent piece on "Is Spring a Misnomer."

Recalling the fact that the method of determining the date of Easter was established by the Council of Nice in the year 325, his subsequent comment unmistakably shows that he believes that notable event took place at Nice, France.

But he is wrong. The Council of 325 was convened by the Emperor Constantine at Nice (or Nicaea) in Asia Minor. The principle question before the Council was whether God or Jesus Christ are of the same essence, and its decision was in the affirmative. Arius of Alexandria and his followers maintained that there is a difference between the Father and Son, the latter being in a sense secondary.

Our editorial brother of the Transcript appears to have his history on straight, but in the instance cited his geopraphy is off about 1,500 miles.

EFFICIENCY IN BUSINESS ENCOURAGED

Efficiency in business is not only encouraged through operation under N. R. A. codes of fair competition, but it is rendered highly necessary, according to N. R. A. officials. Manufacturers were the first to prepare for setting up research councils to determine sources of supply of raw materials, transportation, and all other forms of cost. Wholesalers and retailers are fortifying themselves with the same agenices, and, with each maintaining a check on the others for its protection, the ultimate consumer cannot fail to be benefitted.

An illustration is afforded in the creation of a statistical research bureau by the controllers' congress of the National Retail Dry Goods Association. In explaining its purpose, Alfred Henry, chairman of the congress, said:

"It will serve as an economic clearing house, and as such fill a long felt want in retail distribution. It will supply retailers throughout the country with data of the utmost value as to buying operations and forecasts based on quantitive investigations. For example, study of price trends and production costs will disclose whether prices of blankets for next fall have economic justiflcation. Cotton forwardings reached their highest figures early last summer. An adequate study at that time would have shown this erratic movement was due to the desire to avoid the cotton tax, but was not likely to continue. Such studies in many lines that vitally affect retailers will indicate the best time for them to make commitments."

Some of the large stores of the country have weathered the depression through constant attention to such details as can now be available to all retailers.

IN THE MODERN GAS RANGE

YES, something has happened in gas range manufacture that makes ten year old stoves entirely out of date. The 1934 gas range is automatic. The top burners light themselves. The temperature control does oven watching for you, cooks and bakes with precision measured heat. Oven insulation helps keep the kitchen cool during hot summer weather and saves fuel.

The 1934 gas range has beauty in design and finish. Porcelain enamel has replaced black paint. Even the oven linings are porcelain enamel as easy to keep clean as a china plate.

The 1934 gas range has modern conveniences. There is the broiler drawer that permits more variety in cooking. There is the utility drawer that saves many kitchen steps.

See the Spring 1934 display of gas ranges being shown by dealers everywhere. For all the new beauty, new conveniences and automatic features prices of these better ranges are ridiculously low.

HAY FEVER

By California Medical Association

Not long ago pedestrians in a downtown street of a certain California city craned their necks to watch an individual who seemed to be conducting some strange performance on the eighteenth story balcony of the City Hall.

The performer was a medical worker. He was setting up vaseline-coated plates upon which to catch pollen from grasses, trees and shrubs blown by the breeze.

His task formed but one small phase of a gigantic task, that of catching "on the fly," classifying and estimating as to quantity the numerous atmospheric pollens common to this particular city in one year's time. He was one of a vast army enlisted in the war against hay fever.

Since the beginning of civilization man has fought hay fever, but with indifferent success, until recent years.

The pollen that blew in from the fields and pastures of ancient Egypt brought hay fever to kings and commoners, rich and poor alike.

It has been estimated that in the United States today 5,000,000 persons suffer from seasonal or perennial hay fever. But there is hope for the millions today, where there was none for the tribes of early Egypt. The American medical profession has taken the lead in this age-old battle.

Greatest advances have come within the last ten years, one of the most notable being the recognition of food allergy as one cause of hay fever. That is to say, not only the miscoscopic pollen but the food one eats may bring about the symptoms of hay fever on asthma.

Others develop the symptoms in a household where a dog or cat is kept, and one physician reports that relief was obtained for a child simply by doing away with feather pillows.

Diagnosis for pollen sensitivity is made possible through skin testing. The modern allergist rubs dry pollen or extracts of pollen into tiny scratches upon the arm, or else injects the extracts into the skin.

A hive-like swelling around the scratches indicates the pollen to which the patient is sensitive.

By this method, when the pollen to which the patient is sensitive is ascertained, hypodermic injections of the extract of this pollen are given in increasing strength until immunity develops. This treatment is continued through the season in which this particular pollen prevails.

Some have fever patients have exaggerated symptoms because of their intolerance of certain foods. Men and women employed in factories where certain dusts are found may develop the symptoms.

Nevada Gets Red Cross Roll Call Honor Flag

Red Cross Chapters of the state of Nevada were awarded the Roll Call Honor Flag at the closing session of the National Red Cross convention in Washington, D. C. Nevada scored the highest mark throughout the nation in the Roll Call last November, enrolling 7.8 per cent of its population as Red Cross members.

The flag was presented by Miss Mabel T. Boardman, national secretory of the Red Cross, to the Nevada delegates with ceremony, Senators Key Pittman and Patrick McCarran, Representatives J. G. Scrugham and J. C. Robinson, chcairman of the Carson City Chapter, receiving the emblem in behalf of the state of Nevada.

The Roll Call Honor Flag was donated by a member of the central committee of the Red Cross. It was won in 1926, the first year of the competition, by California. Vermont took it East in 1927. New Hampshire won it in 1928 and 1929. The District of Columbia held it in 1930 and 1931.

Montana won the trophy in 1932, and now yields it to Nevada, which will retain the flag until some other state excels its high mark of 7.8 per cent Red Cross members to the state's population.

Pearl: "You really ought to come to Shrimpton with me next summer. I had a wonderful time there this year. I won a beauty competition."

Ruby: "No, I think I'd rather go to more crowded place."—The Calgary Herald.

Mrs. Gray: "You're looking very happy this morning. Have you had good news?"

Mrs. Jay: "Wonderful! My husband has broken down and we're going to Palm Beach for the winter."

U. S. FOREIGN TRADE SHOWS STEADY GAIN

National foreign trade gains were more than sustained during February, according to the Department of Commerce report.

Exports totaled $162,805,000, a drop of only 5 per cent from the January figures, although the February decline in recent years has averaged 11 per cent. The February total represented a gain of 60 per cent over February, 1933, thus widening the spread over last year's level. In January the difference was 43 per cent.

Imports were valued at $132,938, a drop of 2 per cent, the usual seasonal decline. The gain in imports over February, 1933, was 59 per cent.

Total export of motor vehicles in February was the largest since May, 1931, and of industrial machinery the largest since December, 1931. The 1934 favorable balance for the first two months of 1934 was $68,540,000, which private reports indicate has been greatly increased in March.

C. C. C. Workers in Camp Just Above Muir Woods

Assurances from the offices of the National Park Service that the encampment of the Civilians' Conservation Corps, now encamped just above Muir Woods, would be continued for the next six months, has been received with enthusiasm by the directors of the Tamalpais Mountain Play Association, as well as by all residents of Marin county.

The encampment will henceforth be designated as Mount Tamalpais State Park Camp 23.

The program of emergency construction work of this camp is dedicated to the Muir Woods, National Monument, Mount Tamalpais State Park (within which lies the Mountain Theatre), and the large holdings of the Marin Municipal Water District. The general plan includes the location and improvement of trails, footbridges and minor roads, the reduction of fire hazards, and the building of fire breaks, along strategic ridges.

Of special interest to lovers of the Tamalpais Mountain Play, however, are the improvements now under way at the site of the amphitheatre. Here the C. C. C. workers have leveled and sodded a large stage and have developed a background and wings of transplanted trees and shrubs. Boldly simple stone work has been constructed to outline aisles and seating terraces, rock from the nearby hillsides being used as material.

Sales Tax Revenue is Collected at Low Cost

California has achieved the double distinction of collecting more sales tax revenue, at less overhead, than any other state in the nation. Fred E. Stewart, of Oakland, member of the State Board of Equalization, which administers the tax, so announced in a report from Sacramento on April 10.

Only about 1.8 per cent of collections under the California sales tax will be required to defray all costs of collection and administration, according to Stewart.

Some folks are happiest when they feel that others are sorry for them.

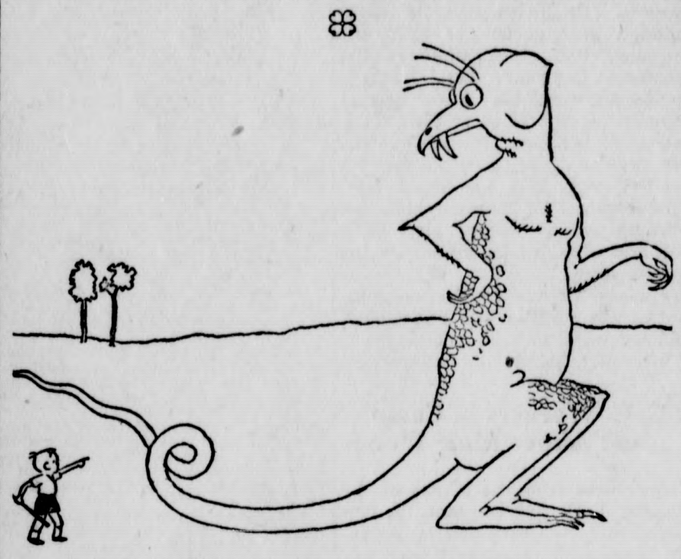
THINGAMAJIG!



"I WONDER what's a Thingamajig!
Do you suppose they're terribly big—
With elephant ears and octopus eyes
So awfully big they're bigger than pies—
And dragons claws and scratchety scales,
Tremendous teeth and slithery tails?"
Oh, yes, perhaps they're just like that—
As long as whales
And just as fat.
Perhaps they make a frightful sight
Especially when they're seen
At night—
And perhaps they make
A terrible noise—
But they're scared to death
Of good little boys!

Cat Treks 39 Miles to Catch Its Ship

New York.—Capt. W. J. Close of the liner Pastores has a prize cat tale to tell.

As his steamer docked after a stormy voyage from West Indian ports, he related that the ship pet, "Lord Haggis," a female despite the name, was accidentally left at Port Morant, Jamaica, when the vessel put in to take on a cargo of bananas.

When the vessel arrived at Kingston, Jamaica, 39 miles from Port Morant, on its next voyage, the feline was on the dock awaiting it and calmly walked aboard as soon as the gangplank was let down.

Now the captain is trying to figure out how "Lord Haggis" knew where to catch the ship.

Grewsome Laboratory Experiment

Weird laboratory experiments to discover a modern "elixir of life," by stirring puppies' heartbeats halted by death, were pronounced a scientific success by University of California savants recently—even though the dogs died. Doctor Cornish announced that the experiments will be continued and a strenuous effort made to add "consciousness" to the restored heart action. This, he said, might cause life to be prolonged for a considerable period, perhaps indefinitely.

Fifty Famous Frontiersmen

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

Mad Anthony's Spies

WHEN Gen. Anthony Wayne started his campaign against the hostile tribes of the Old Northwest in 1793, he resolved not to be taken by surprise by the enemy as his predecessor, Gen. Arthur St. Clair, had been two years before. Therefore, he "employed a number of the best woodsmen the frontier afforded, to act as rangers." He gave command of this force of some 40 men to Capt. Ephraim Kibby, a native of New Jersey who had been one of the first settlers near Cincinnati after the Revolution, a hunter for the garrison at Fort Washington and a scout for St. Clair.

Skilled as were Kibby and his rangers in woodcraft and valuable as they were to Wayne as scouts, the elite of the company was a "division of spies" composed of less than a dozen men. Capt. William Wells, a Kentuckian, commanded them, and the others were Robert McLelland, Henry Miller, and four others identified only by their last names—May, Hickman, Mahaffy and Thorp.

"Captain Wells and his companions were confidential and privileged gentlemen in camp, who were only called upon to do duty upon very particular and interesting occasions," says one of the historians of that period. "They were permitted a carte blanche among the horses of the dragoons, and when upon duty, went well mounted; whilst the rangers commanded by Captain Kibby went on foot." One reason for this favoritism was that three of them, Wells, Miller and May, had been "white Indians"—returned captives who could assume the dress and speak the tongue of the red men so well as to deceive any Indian they met, thus increasing their value as spies.

Miller had a younger brother, Christopher, who was still held by the Indians and by a remarkable coincidence, one of his first spying expeditions, when he, Wells and McLelland were sent out by Wayne to bring in a prisoner for questioning, resulted in the capture of an Indian who turned out to be his brother! Christopher later became one of Wells' spies, whose services were so valuable in the success of Wayne's campaign which culminated at the victory at Fallen Timbers in 1794.

After that, the Millers, Hickman, Mahaffy and Thorp drop out of history, but two of the others were marked for future fame—McLelland as a fur trader on the Missouri and an employee of the American Fur company whose deeds are immortalized in Washington Irving's "Astoria"; and Wells as Indian agent at Fort Wayne and hero of the Fort Dearborn massacre in 1812 when his devotion to his niece, Rebekah Heald, led him to the death which he knew awaited him on the shores of Lake Michigan.

Two Names on Utah's Map

ONE was a Frenchman, Etienne Provot (sometimes spelled Provost), who was a member of the famous Ashley-Henry expedition of 1822 up the Missouri and later captain of a company of Ashley-Henry men who trapped all through central Wyoming. The next year he quarreled with Ashley and joined the rival Pratte-Chouteau company which later merged with the American Fur company. After that he became head of a group of free trappers and journeyed from Wyoming over into Utah.

Authentic records of this period are scarce but Provot may have seen the Great Salt lake before Jim Bridger did and he may have gone through South Pass before Thomas Fitzpatrick did. A little more authentic is the story of how the site of the city named for him was baptized in blood—when a party of treacherous Snake Indians killed 17 trappers in his company. His long career of adventure came to an end with his death in St. Louis in 1850.

The other was an Englishman, Peter Skene Ogden, the son of a New York Loyalist or Tory who removed to Canada after the Revolution. Young Ogden entered the service of the North-West Fur company and later was a brigade leader for Dr. John McLoughlin, chief factor of the Hudson's Bay company in the Pacific Northwest. As such he explored much of the present state of Idaho and parts of Nevada and Utah. He is said to have been the first white man to see Mount Shasta and the headwaters of the Sacramento river. He discovered the Humboldt river, which for many years bore his name.

Ogden maried a Salish woman and won a great influence over many of the tribes of the Northwest. Because of this he was able to rescue some of the captives held by the Indians after the Whitman massacre in 1847.

Whether or not he and Provot ever knew each other personally is uncertain, but it is likely that they met some time while both were ranging through Utah or at some gathering of trappers in that part of the country. And it would be easy to imagine the Frenchman and the Englishman meeting again at the "Last Rendezvous" in that Valhalla where gather the spirits of all the men who made history in the glamorous days of the fur trade and Ogden boasting "A city a river and a valley in Utah bear my name!" To which Provot might reply "That's three. But I have four that bear my name—a city, a river, a canyon and a county!"

STEWS DESERVE CAREFUL STUDY

Not Flat and Tasteless When Properly Served.

By EDITH M. BARBER

THERE is nothing for which we more need standards in our own cooking than for the preparation of less expensive cuts of meat which are sometimes classified under that uninteresting title of stew. If you dignify them by an interesting name such as "beef a la mode," "blanquette of veal," "casserole of lamb" and so on, you immediately get a new set of mind towards the dish which, however, must be prepared with care and seasoned with art to be worthy of its name.

By the way, few people seem to realize that the French are as famous for their preparation of inexpensive treats as for more elaborate dishes. In almost all these dishes the meat is browned in fat. Often a clove of garlic or some minced onion, often both, is cooked at the same time. Vegetables and a variety of seasonings are then added. Liquid is poured over the meat, which is covered closely. The slow cooking then begins, either on top of the stove or over a very low fire or in the oven. Browning or "searing" the meat keeps in the natural juices and gives more flavor.

Perhaps you have all had stews where the meat itself is stringy and tasteless, even if the gravy which surrounds it is well seasoned. There are one or two "white stews" made from veal or lamb, usually served with dumplings or noodles, that are very good, but in general a colorful brown stew is more delicious. Some recipes call for browning only part of the meat. Sometimes meat is rolled in flour before it is browned to give a certain amount of thickness to the gravy. You may add more thickening just before serving by mixing a little flour with cold water to a paste and stirring it in. The addition of a cooking wine or a wine flavoring to the liquid improves the flavor, or you may add a very little vinegar to take the place of the wine.

There are several very good canned stews on the market at the moment, as well as corned beef hash. The busy housekeeper who has not time for the long cooking which a homemade dish of this sort demands will find real satisfaction in some of these newer canned products. Most of them are well seasoned, but you may add an individual touch of seasoning if you add a little water and let them simmer while you are getting the rest of your meal. The meat should be well cooked but not stringy, well flavored, and the gravy should be smooth, not watery, and well seasoned.

Ragout de Mouton.

Cut three to four pounds of neck and breast of mutton into pieces. Brown in two tablespoonfuls of dripping or butter and remove to a dry pan. In the remaining fat fry two or three slices of onion and two cloves of garlic until light brown. Stir in two tablespoonfuls of flour and when brown add one cupful of canned tomatoes and one-half cupful of water. Stir over the fire until sauce is thick; add salt, pepper, parsley, a bay leaf and a sprig of thyme. Return meat to sauce. Cover and let simmer for an hour. Add twelve potato balls, two of three small turnips cut into dice, two sliced carrots and cook about three-quarters of an hour longer until vegetables are tender.

Blanquette de Veau.

Cut three pounds of breast and shoulder of veal into pieces and put into a heavy saucepan with two or three slices of onion, two sliced carrots and one clove of garlic and one tablespoonful of minced parsley. Sprinkle with salt and pepper and add two cupfuls of cold water. Cover and simmer over a low fire for an hour and a half. Melt two tablespoonfuls of butter, stir in same of flour and add to the meat, stirring over the fire until the sauce is smooth. Add one cupful of sliced mushrooms and continue cooking fifteen minutes. Remove the meat from the sauce; heat platter. Then beat two egg yolks with the juice of a half lemon. Add a little of the hot sauce and stir this mixture into the saucepan and continue stirring until thick and smooth. If the sauce is too thick add a little more water and pour sauce over the meat.

Veau a la Casserole.

Brown two pounds of round of veal in two tablespoonfuls of hot salad oil or drippings. Season well with salt and pepper. Add two or three slices of onion and one cupful of water and simmer for one and one-half hour. Add two cupfuls of sliced mushrooms, one half cupful of stoned sliced olives. Let simmer twenty minutes and serve.

How It Started

By Jean Newton

"Where There's Life There's Hope"

THIS is an old saying, with which we are all familiar. It finds expression in practically every instance of dangerous illness in which the outcome is in doubt.

The authorship of the saying is credited to the English dramatist, John Gay, who lived from 1688 to 1723 and whose "Beggar's Opera" is still presented on the stage. True, in his "The Sick Man and the Angel" we find:

"While there is life there's hope, he cried."

But a considerable time before, the Roman statesman, Cicero, whose life span was from 106 to 43 B. C., also said, in his "Epistolarum ad Atticum:"

"While the sick man has life there is hope!"

House of Lords Amazed at Convicts' Impudence

London.—Dartmoor prison has long been reckoned one of the toughest of British penal institutions. The prisoners mutinied there in 1932.

Now the bishop of Exeter thinks the trouble is that they do not have compulsory attendance at Sunday service.

Instead of going to chapel, the convicts lie on their beds and read novels, the bishop told the House of Lords. Rude songs were sung at the prison concerts, he charged.

Out of a total of 200 Church of England prisoners, the Sunday congregations often numbered only five, said the bishop.

And the growing tendency towards impudence in modern crime is reflected in the conduct of the prisoners. The prison chaplain received a threat that if he didn't make the concerts more amusing the prisoners would get him dismissed, said the bishop.

The bishop himself withdrew his application to hold a service for the inmates after the mutiny, when the governor told him that he could not be responsible for his safety.

Lights of New York

By L. L. STEVENSON

Naturally, many things get lost in New York. It is entirely possible and in fact quite easy, for a human being to lose himself from the millions so effectively that even the police can't find him. But when it comes to five tons of statuary that's something else again. Still two statues, of granite and eight feet in height, were lost and it took quite a lot of searching to find them. The statues used to stand in Bryant park. They were moved in 1932 to make room for the George Washington bicentennial exhibit which, as is well known, ended in the red and left Bryant park a mess of mud flats. Recently, citizens interested in the statues made inquiries about them. It was supposed they were stored in the library. But they weren't. So the park department looked into the matter. The statues couldn't be found. At last they were discovered over in Brooklyn.

* * *

The statues that got lost—and were found out in the open all wrapped up in canvas—are those of Washington Irving, who made Sleepy Hollow known to the world and who was New York's first park commissioner. When he is in his place, he looks down on Sixth avenue and Fortieth street. The other is that of Dr. James Marion Sims who founded the first hospital for women in New York. His statue is the work of Ferdinand von Miller and Irving's is the work of Frederick Beer. The two statues were placed in the park in 1894. Having been found, the next question is, how to get them back where they belong. The cost is estimated at $500 and just at the moment, though this city spends $2,000,000 a day, there isn't any $500 available. Also the new plan for the park doesn't seem to provide a place for them.

A group, sipping cocktails in the Park Central tropical room, was discussing the origin of the word hooch which isn't used so much now as it was a little while ago. One member declared that it came from the chemical symbols of tannic acid. He was hooted down because those symbols spell CHOCHO when the numerals are omitted. Finally a gentleman strolled over and remarked that everybody, including the chemical adherent, was quite wrong. Hooch, he said, came from hoochinoc, which is Alaskan Indian bootleg. He knew because he used to live in Alaska. Instead of accepting an invitation to sit in, he excused himself and strolled away and that's all that was learned from or about him.

He gave up riding in the subway several years ago but still attends to business. He is the owner of the Arlington Chemical company in Yonkers and is in his office each day. Mr. Andrus has one hobby—helping needy children. He established a home for them in Yonkers some time ago and several years ago, set up a foundation for the home.

A friend just back from a business trip to Cleveland told me a story that gave me a chuckle. The Press of that city runs a comic strip, "Dolly Duck." For promotion purposes, one morning before the city was awake, 50 white ducks were turned loose in the streets. Each duck wore a card which read: "Be kind to Dolly Duck. Return me to my home with the Cleveland Press and you will receive $1 and can take me home." And by night, 65 ducks were delivered to the Press office.

On the rear seat, a woman of the dowager type with a sable wrap, a lorgnette and a haughty expression. Beside her, a laundered and ribboned Pom with what nose it had, in the air. And behind on the bumper two ragged urchins gleefully thumbing their noses at pedestrians as the car glided up town.

'GIVE HAND SIGNALS' SAFETY PLEA URGES

Motorists who fail to give hand signals violate a code of courtesy and safety, as well as provisions of the motor vehicle laws, declares a statement by the public safety department of the California State Automobile Association. The motorists' organization is conducting a program of educational activities this month on the subject of hand signals.

"Every driver should not only operate his own automobile, but also drive for the other fellow," says a safety slogan quoted in the statement, which emphasizes that one of the greatest traffic problems confronting the motorist is that of anticipating what other drivers are going to do. In an effort to overcome this hazard the law was adopted requiring the motorist to give hand signals.

The law is explicit and requires motorists before starting, stopping or turning their cars to give a signal and also, when overtaking or passing another car, to give an audible warning.

In specifiying how signals must be made, the law declares that signals must be given continuously for the last fifty feet before stopping or turning. The reason for this requirement is that when a signal is not given until the last moment other traffic may not be able to slow down or stop in time to avoid a collision.

Attention is also being directed by the Automobile Association to the section of the law which requires that a motorist, before changing his course of travel, must first ascertain that he can do so in safety. If a maneuver cannot be made safely, the motorist must wait until the way is clear.

It is pointed out that this requirement places the burden of caution on the motorist, so that others may not be endangered by his actions.

PERFECT BRIDGE HANDS

Every once in a while we read of someone holding a perfect bridge hand, consisting of all thirteen cards in a certain suit. Such an extraordinary occurrence may be accounted for in two ways—either the cards were stacked, or somebody lied. At least that is what must happen in 90 per cent of reported cases, says a recent writer.

Of course, the dealing of a perfect hand after a legitimate shuffle is not impossible, but the chance of any honestly dealt hands consisting of an entire suit is one in 158,753,000,000. The improbability of holding such a hand is illustrated by a computation shownig that if each of the 100,000,000 brige players in the United States were to play fifteen hands every day, according to the law of averages a solid-suit would be dealt only once in three years.

It also has been figured out that when cards are properly shuffled each player should get a singleton every three hands, a six-card suit every six hands, a seven-card suit every twenty-eight hands, and a void suit every twenty hands.

The above figures were worked out by Prof. Woodruff, of Boston Tech, who has invented a card shuffling machine which will deal a pack into hands of the ideal random type in four seconds. He has also figured the number of ways in which the fifty-two cards may be arranged. If anyone would like to see what such a number looks like, let him write 80,660 and add sixty-nine cyphers. Then try to read it.
